Introduction

A Note From The Author

Greetings Legend!

It is my absolute pleasure, joy, and delight to present you with this months' compendium, "Roll Me A City!"

Chances are high your players will come across a handful of these during their adventures.

As a player myself, my favourite moments took place within the borders of fantasy cities our GM lovingly made from scratch.

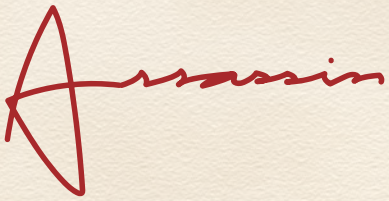

This book takes away the pain and stress of building a city without a framework. No more worrying about missing key details your players will point out on game day that you overlooked! This book will fill your cities with everything you and your players will need for a vibrant session every single time!

Simply grab your dice, and get ready to roll up moments that will leave everyone at your table hungry for more!

So be blessed! You're a legend, and I hope you enjoy :)

Yours truly,

Assassin NPC

Chapter 1: Reason For Existence

Why does your city exist? Roll one word, and extrapolate for further meaning.

For example, I rolled a “6” on the 1d100 table which is “bridge”.

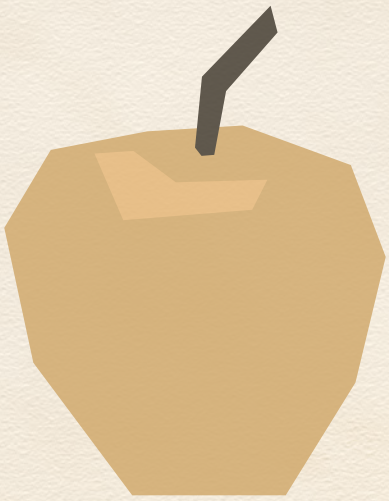

Perhaps my city began as a bridge where travelers would rest during their journey and water their animals, and overtime shops and homes began to spring up to serve the weary travelers until centuries later, a bustling mercantile city now surrounds the river.

Or perhaps my entire city is built on a giant ancient bridge that rests over a dangerous gorge with unspeakable horrors hidden deep-down in the darkness below.

You can put your "reason for existence" into your city’s name, if you like! (ie. "Bridgeport")

Chapter 2: Economy

In this chapter we will determine what industry makes your city tick! Included in this section is a 1d100 table of strategic resources. First, we will select your main industries from this table. After that, we'll find out what resources are the most scarce (or the most valuable) in your city using this same table.

A) Main Industry(s)

What drives your city's economy? Let's find out!

Roll (1d4)d100s on the strategic resource table found in this chapter, and add them to your fillable city template!

B) Resource Scarcity

Now to find your city's luxury resources - the things that are SUPER hard to get! Roll 2d100 from the strategic resource table found in this chapter.

Your FIRST roll is a scarce resource, and your SECOND roll will be for an EXTREMELY scarce resource! Reroll any copies, and add these to your fillable template.

Now imagine how scarce resources may play into your city's economy. Your locals may be willing to pay absurdly large amounts for a tiny bit of the rare resource, or they may know of someone who would.

Alternatively, perhaps the resource is scarce because it is outlawed, and thus your players may be hunted by the government if suspected to be carrying such things!

For example, I rolled 56 (mastiffs) for my city's scarce resource. Perhaps mastiffs are the royal animal companion in your city, and only those with royal blood are allowed to own them.

I then rolled a 19 (lettuce) for my second roll, the "extremely scarce" resource. Perhaps a deadly disease that can naturally be cured by lettuce is ravaging your city, but a larva infestation has killed all of the lettuce crop this year, making lettuce the most valuable resource in the city.

Pro Tip: Giving your players access to these scarce resources beforehand can make for some interesting interactions in your city.

For low fantasy campaigns, you may opt to reroll any italicized resources from this list of industries.

Chapter 3: Culture

In this chapter we will cover three main points of interest for your city: government, population, and religion.

A) Government

Mayor

Let's give your city a mayor! You can find a name for your mayor using our "Name Generator 8K" found in APPENDIX B.

Once you have a name, let's give your mayor a goal. This goal will help shape the political climate of your city.

1d8	Your Mayor's Goal...
1	Change the laws
2	Fund a top secret research project
3	Have euphoric amounts of fun
4	Impose heavy taxation
5	Know what everyone else is doing
6	Overthrow the religious order
7	Preserve the government
8	Stay in power forever

Keep in mind, your mayor's motives for the goal you selected can be good or evil.

Let's take a moment to imagine WHY the mayor might want this goal, and write it on your fillable template.

For example, I rolled a 3 (have euphoric amounts of fun). Perhaps the mayor is given to debauchery and always overspends on needless pleasures while the city starves. Or perhaps the mayor has two more days to live before he dies of a deadly sickness, and wants to have fun one last time together with his beloved citizens before he rests in peace.

Law & Crime

What happens when brigands and outlaws (aka your players) commit crimes in your town?

Below is a quick overview of how you might rank crimes in your city.

Petty Crime
- Fist fights
- Tavern brawls
- Pickpocketing
- Property damage

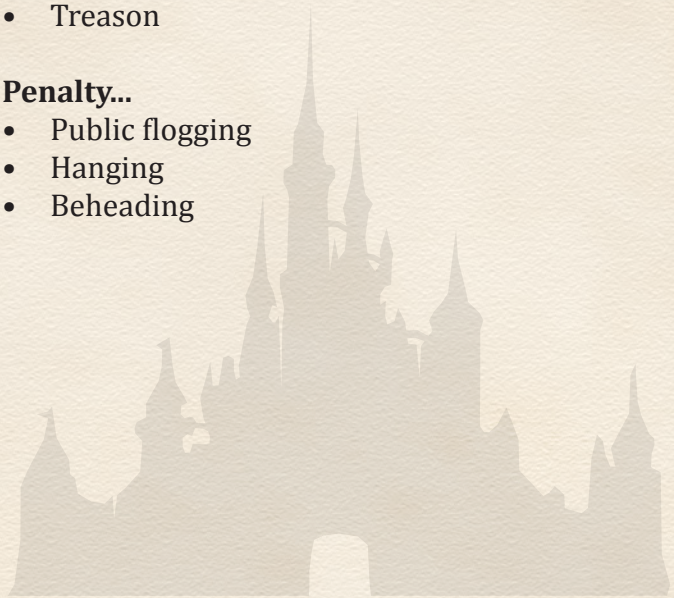

Penalty...
- Small fine
- Short jail time

Minor Crime
- Armed Assault
- Robbery
- Major property damage

Penalty...
- Large fine
- Long jail time

Major Crime
- Murder
- Arson
- Poison
- Treason

Penalty...
- Public flogging
- Hanging
- Beheading

B) Population

Size

What is the population of your city? Is it a tiny city made up from a cluster of several ever-growing villages, or is it a 200k metropolis like the ancient city of babylon? Roll to find out!

1d6	Citizens
1	5,000
2	10,000
3	25,000
4	50,000
5	100,000
6	200,000

Attitude

What is the attitude of the people in your city? Are they feeling grateful, or grumpy? Roll below to find out!

(A population's emotional state of being ranked from highest to lowest in descending order)

1d6	Cirizens
1	Ecstatic
2	Happy
3	Content
4	Uneasy
5	Angry
6	Revolt

C) Religion

Finally, let's give your city a religion! Your city's religion could be…

- Tied to their reason for existence…
- Tied to their strategic resource…
- Tied to their government's opinions…
- Tied to their most powerful faction… (see next chapter, "Factions" for more info)
- Tied to a different, pre-existing religion you want to incorporate…

Pick one of these options, and use them as your city's main religion.

For example, if their strategic resource is "Jade," maybe your city worships a deity known as the "Jade Dragon."

For extra spice, sprinkle in some minor religious groups who disagree with the city's main religion. Inner tension makes your sessions far more engaging for your players.

Chapter 4: Factions

Let's spice up your city with some political factions who will give your government a run for their money! Once you have all the factions you want, roll a goal and a gossip for each one of your city's factions (found at the end of this chapter).

A) Merchant Cartel

Perhaps your city has a Merchant Cartels (or guilds) which help organize (and at times control) the means of production!

Roll from the table below 1d4 times to determine how many Merchant Cartels have a hold on your city, then write them down in descending order on your fillable template.

(1d4)d20	Merchant Cartel (or Guild)
1	Alchemist
2	Archer
3	Baker
4	Bartender
5	Blacksmith
6	Butcher
7	Explorer
8	Fisherman
9	Goldsmith
10	Hunter
11	Jeweler
12	Lumberjack
13	Miller
14	Miner
15	Performer
16	Sailor
17	Silversmith
18	Tattooist
19	Trapper
20	Whittler

Now let's determine which cartel(s) hold the most power in your city. Roll 1d4 from the table below, and apply it to the 1d4 guilds that you rolled.

1d4	Cartel Power (Influence) Levels
1-2	Descending in power
3	All even/equal
4	One strong, the others weaker but even with each other

For example, if my city's guilds are "Baker", "Explorer", "Miner", and "Hunter" in that order, and I roll a 4 on the power level table, then the BAKER guild runs the city, and the remaining three guilds hold significantly less power in the city than the bakers, but are even with each other, and perhaps secretly hate the baker's guild behind their backs.

B) Thieves Guild

Maybe your city has a thieves guild! Gang activity is always a fun way to make your fantasy world feel more real. For an in-depth guide on building crime syndicates for your RPG worlds, check out my complete compendium called "Roll Me A Crime Syndicate," on my website or on my Patreon.

C) Cabal of Mages

Perhaps you have secret societies of mages who pull the strings in your city behind closed doors!

A great way to think of your city is like an onion. At first, your players only see the first layer of the onion which are the buildings, streets, the citizens, and everything out in the open. But after awhile, they see the under layer where the thieves guild resides, and the crime happens. But several layers deeper into the onion of your city lies the secret societies, the cabal of mages, the ones who've paid the price for power in exchange for their minds, will, and conscience.

But you don't give this information away to your players freely! Like an onion, the deeper your players cut, the more they should "cry". This information should cost your players something to acquire.

D) Defense Force

Think of this as the group that spends their whole lives training for defense and combat in order to be hired out to the richest bidder (like Sparta, but on a smaller scale, and way less cool).

If the government is the wealthiest, this defense force will serve the mayor. If a merchant cartel is the wealthiest, they will serve the cartel. If the thieves guild, then the thieves guild, if the mage guild, then the mages, and so on. This defense force gotta put food on the table.

E) Conflict (Goal)

What happens when the factions in your city have goals that don't align? Spicy encounters for your players to get mucked up in! Below is a list of goals you can roll for each of your factions. This will help you create storylines in your city where you can force your players to choose a side and dive headfirst into the conflict.

Roll one goal for each of your city's factions, and add these faction goals to your fillable template.

1d10	Faction Goal
1	Overthrow the religious order
2	Preserve the religious order
3	Overthrow the government
4	Preserve the government
5	Tax the people
6	Abolish taxes
7	Control the judicial system
8	Remove all laws
9	Do things in secret
10	Know what everyone else is doing

F) Gossip

To pour more oil on the fire of your city's political scene, let's throw some juicy rumors about your factions that might flutter amongst your city's citizens!

1d12	Faction Gossip
1	[Faction Leader] is trying to escape the city
2	[Faction Leader] is weak and has no heir
3	[Faction Leader] is dying of an infectious disease
4	[Faction Leader] is broke from overspending
5	[Faction Leader] is actively breaking the law
6	[Faction Leader] is having an affair with the mayor's wife
7	[Faction] is cutting corners to cut costs
8	[Faction] is stealing tax money for their pleasures
9	[Faction] is cursed by an ancient power
10	[Faction] is abducting citizens
11	[Faction] is receiving a really big government grant
12	[Faction] is trying to poison the city

Pro Tip: To involve your players in the stories of your factions, you may have them overhear citizens discussing this gossip on the streets or in the taverns of your city.

Perhaps you have your players encounter a faction member who may be asking questions to random citizens, or a member who wants your players' help in exchange for compensation. The possible sidequests are endless!

Chapter 5: Layout

Now that we know WHAT's in your city, let's map it out!

Cities usually start from a central point of interest that brings life to its citizens. This spot could bring physical life like a river, or emotional life like a unique sculpture, or order to life like a city hall or palace, or protect life like a thick-walled fortress. Everything else in your city would surround this central point in a series of irregularly shaped rings, each ring larger than the other.

The first ring surrounding this central point of interest is the most expensive land in your city. This is where the nobility live, or where the marketplace is, because whoever lives here will need a lot of money, or a lot of authority.

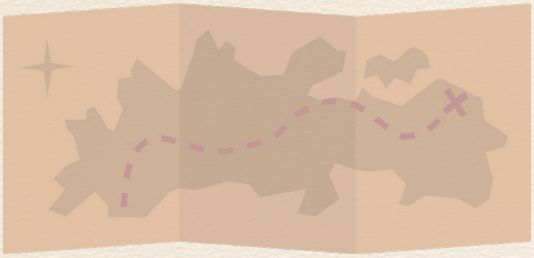

From this central wealthy hub, the city slowly spreads out as land becomes less valuable further and further away. You can populate these outer rings with those not so well off. If you are building a walled city (as most cities were), it might be built in a ring around this segment.

Then outside of the walls would be the farmlands with barns and storehouses that provide the food and basic dietary needs for the citizens who live within your city.

If you have a really big city (with 100,000 people or more), your city buildings may sprawl out far beyond the old walls and extend a fair ways out to create several more rings. In some cases, this "expansion" is then walled in once more with new fortifications, and the inner-walled-in space is referred to as the "old city."

Within the rings of your city can be found your city's districts.

Here is a list of common districts found in cities which you can add to your own cities, followed by a short list of special districts found in some cities, but not all. You may add these districts according to your own discretion and the needs of your campaign.

A) Common Districts

Administrative
Where the tax collectors, judicial system, and other governmental occupations perform their daily activities.

Cemetery
Where the dead people lay to rest. May they rest in peace.

Housing
Where (mostly) living people live…

Royal / Noble
The bloodliners - those who are directly related to the rulers or royals, and their servants.

High Class
The wealthy, affluent, and sometimes powerful, although not directly related to the bloodliners.

Middle Class
A very small group of people who didn't have a strong presence during the middle ages.

Lower Class
Most of your city's population (probably a good 90% or more live here, or in the slums).

Slum / Deadtown
The place nobody wants to live. The government turns a blind eye to most of the dealings that happen down here.

Market / Bazaar
Where things are most commonly bought and sold. Your players will often ask to find this place when entering a city. Therefore, this is arguably your city's most important location.

Military
Where the soldiers train, eat, and sleep.

Red Light
The "slum/deadtown" version of your "market/bazaar" district.

Religious / Divine
Where your religious order resides and performs their activities. Often a very wealthy district, surpassed only by the market/bazaar.

Storage
Where warehouses and granaries for your city's food reserves are found, as well as the stockyards where animals are stored and kept. Can be located in and/or outside your city walls.

Trades / Guild Halls
Where the industrial district of your city churns out products day-in and day-out. The merchant cartel/guild administrative halls can likely be found in this district too.

B) Special Districts

Arena / Amphitheater
Where people go to be entertained. Are you not entertained?

Library / Educational
Where people go to learn. For a select few cities, this district is the point of interest from which the city grows around. This district can also be sprinkled anywhere within your city walls that you like.

Mage / Arcane
Where high-fantasy lovers go to learn booyah booyah.

Medical / Healing
Where the irreparably injured go to get repaired.

Parks / Zoo
Where citizens might go for relaxation, de-stressing, or entertainment.

Port
Only applicable for cities next to large bodies of water. Often the most expensive real estate if your city has one.

Chapter 6: NPC Builder

This NPC builder will make your life easy.

Instead of pre-planning every single shop owner, city guard member, mom, dad, and criminal underling, we will create five NPC's each with a personality and quirk that you can copy and paste into your campaign at will whenever your players want to randomly speak to someone new.

This will save you hours of your life prepping and worrying for situations that may never take place.

To start, choose a name.
(See APPENDIX B for "Name generator 8K")

Next, roll a personality for your NPC.

1d20	Personality
1	Afraid
2	Angry
3	Bashful
4	Caring
5	Childish
6	Competitive
7	Driven
8	Edgy
9	Elderly
10	Generous
11	Happy
12	Insecure
13	Lazy
14	Proud
15	Rad
16	Relaxed
17	Sad
18	Sassy
19	Selfish
20	Stressed

Finally, let's give them a quirk!

1d20	Quirk
1	Always asks for help
2	Anxious laughter
3	Assumes the worst
4	Blinks rapidly
5	Clean freak
6	Extremely shy
7	Know-it-all
8	Loves to dance
9	Must have order
10	Never prepared
11	People pleaser
12	Picks their nose
13	Rules lawyer
14	Shows off
15	Spontaneously sings
16	Super blunt
17	Struggles with control
18	Talks to themselves
19	Very defensive
20	Wants to be in charge

Now write up five more NPC's for your fillable template!

For example, the first NPC I rolled is Johnny. if my players enter the city for the first time and they want to go to the blacksmith, I can make Johnny the blacksmith. Or if they go into the magic shop first instead, Johnny can be the business mage running the shop behind the counter.

They'll never know that I just pulled Johnny from my city template, and that's the beauty of it. There's so much freedom now! The next place they go to, I'll use my second NPC, and the third place, the third, and so on. Feel free to roll up more NPC's using these tables as need be!

NPC Name Generator

"How can there possibly be 8,000 name combinations," you say? All you have to do is multiply 100 first names by 40 last names to get 4,000 name combinations, then multiply that by 2 to account for both male and female name possibilities! Yes, I love my maths.

NPC Name Generator

Many last names during the middle ages were indicative of a person's profession! To represent this, I have created a 1d20 roll table below with last names that represent a line of work! For example, "palmer" simply means "pilgrim". Name your NPC's according to their jobs if you like! Alternatively, you may choose to roll from the right table for an old European surname Instead!
